Pranic Healing research published in Journal of Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine

Congratulations to Dr. Jason Calva, Dr. Glenn Mendoza and Dr. Shu Wang on their latest article Integrating the Zang Fu Organs of Traditional Chinese Medicine with the Chakras of Pranic Healing published in the Journal of Acupuncture and Oriental Medicine. The authors correlate the main principles in traditional Chinese Acupuncture with the primary techniques of Master Choa Kok Sui's Pranic Healing. By offering more comprehensive treatments, the practitioner can have a better opportunity for successful healing to take place.

Tales from Real Life:

“I'm in stage 4 of cancer. Though there's been a terrific amount of pain, I've been in pretty good spirits for a time. Then things began going down hill. I was very discouraged, experiencing extreme anxiety and probably depression as well. I couldn't keep track. After one session of Pranic Healing I awoke the next day without pain and found life easier to be in. I think I even laughed throughout the morning. By afternoon, the pain began to return. I think the healing energy put into my system had been used up by then. We're going to do it again. Thank you, GMCKS.”
